Initial discussions with business partners have been constructive. We will now gain an overview of the financial situation and analyse the restructuring options." The provisional insolvency administrator has already spoken with the chairperson of the works council, who has also pledged his support.

Management has already informed the employees about the latest developments. "The situation is not easy. Sascha Festing. Mr Wilhelm Funke is also still onboard and assisting the process.

Salaries guaranteed for three months

The provisional insolvency administrator and his team, which includes attorneys Mr Günther Hahn and Mr Philippe d'Avoine as well as economist Mr Jürgen Schendel, will now arrange for pre-financing of the specific substitute benefits provided under German insolvency law. Salaries will thus be guaranteed for the months of October to December, which means that the 98 employees will continue to receive their pay as normal.

The company has filed for insolvency due to liquidity problems resulting from a number of factors, including late customer payments and cost commitments made in the past that could not be reduced quickly enough. The company supplies prototypes, small series and spare parts to the automotive and other industries. Over recent months, it has entered new sales markets in the aeronautical engineering and defence sectors and revised internal processes in an effort to broaden its financial base.

Attorney Dr Justus Kortleben from the Brinkmann.Weinkauf law firm in Hanover has been supporting the metal foundry's repositioning for some time now. The plan is for this work to continue over the coming weeks. A solution to preserve the business (follow-up solution) will also be developed, and may potentially take the form of an agreement within the framework of an insolvency plan solution. PLUTA attorney Mr Thurm stated,
