Press Release

“The printing industry has been under considerable economic strain for years. Many companies are facing major challenges due to rising costs, the structural shift in media usage and increasing competitive pressure. Having been appointed provisional insolvency administrator, I now intend to gain a comprehensive overview of the financial situation of both companies. The aim is to ensure the continuation of operations, stabilise the businesses and lay the foundations for a possible continuation solution,” said attorney Dr Christian Kaufmann. He is being supported in the PLUTA restructuring team by attorney Ms Natalia Leo and business management expert Mr Frederic Hupens (M.A.).

The companies had already concluded debtor-in-possession proceedings back in 2023. A comprehensive restructuring plan implemented during these initially stabilised business operations. However, despite the progress made at the time, the market environment remained difficult. Following a decline in orders, the application for insolvency became inevitable.

No other companies in the SKN Group affected

Managing director Ms Charlotte Basse said, “We did not take the decision to file for insolvency lightly. However, the current situation left us with very little room for manoeuvre. We will work closely with the provisional insolvency administrator to keep the business operational and find a solution.”

No other companies in the SKN Group are affected by the application for insolvency.
